

I find it interesting that all these new age types who believe the "Universe" is out to bless them are teaching and regurgitating wisdom they learned from Believers. They have read and listened to materials from great leaders who also taught about the Source of their success.

However, when they pass on the wisdom they have gleaned, they conveniently leave out the part about having a relationship with God. These secular humanist types do a good job of training people to expect the blessings that belong to the sons of God as though they are just as entitled to the children's bread as we are. Unfortunately, they are living in harvest because they practice the spiritual laws that we often ignore.

God said if we give, it will be given unto us.

God said if we obey, we will eat the good of the land.

God said if we speak, we'll have what we say.

Those who teach new age stuff do all those things and reap the harvest of their obedience to God's universal laws. How much more should we, God's sons, obey the laws he set in place to bless us???

Fortunately, the wealth of the wicked is being stored up for us, and God told us not to worry about their current success. We already know the outcome.

It just seems so strange to me that it has taken me so long to come around, to get to the place of obedience, when the "world" obeys without much effort. I'm just saying...!
